

Short Reflection

- Which design was easiest?
 - For me the design is the quote because i just added font, border and texture and just quote by tyler durden in the movie fight club. The quote is: "The things you own end up owning you." Mix it with a header saying Quote and adding 2 quotes, one at the top left of the quote and the other one is in the bottom right of the quote. And I also added a neon border for a little touch up.
- What branding elements were applied?
 - In the banner the elements that were applied are logo, tagline, color palette, typography. Same goes with the social media square except there were no logos. And in the promotional image I didn't apply my typography but I did use a single color palette in my branding element for the background so it still aligned with the color of my branding. All the banding elements that I applied came from my branding kit from laboratory 2.
- How you ensured readability and hierarchy.
 - To ensure the readability and hierarchy is first to use a font color that is readable based on the background color. For example if you use a light color background like white background, you need to use a dark colored font like black or dark blue. If you use a dark background color like black you need to use a light color font like white to make sure the text is readable. And for hierarchy the title is always the largest and the important text is the second largest and it's in bold.
- What you learned about creating social media graphics.
 - What I learned about creating social media graphics is that you need to make a graphics that pops out, recognizable, and readable for the viewers to be engaged with the content in front of them. Because if the graphics are unreadable, it will give them a hard time to just read so they skip it. And if it's unrecognizable, there's a chance they won't bother looking at it. And if it doesn't pop out, it will probably slip through the eyes of the viewer cause they didn't even notice it. So it is important to make the social media graphic engaging